You'll never believe one ecstatic day I had. Let me tell you about. Early one morning I awoke to my boisterous alarm clock. When I awoke I didn't see not a glare of light. Normally the sun illuminated my room. When I set up in my cozy, warm bed I noticed some carpet flying over my bed. It was baby blue with tons of sparkles on it. Around the edges it had zig zag lines. I got on the amazing carpet and zoomed out my opened window. Flying in the aqua sky I wonder where the carpet could take me. Suddenly, I saw a sable button on the right hand side of the carpet and on top it said push. I push the button and it asked where I wanted to go. I told the button I wanted to go to Washington D.C. because I been wanting to go there. In the blink of of and eye I was flying over a enormous chalky white house. Then it came to me it was the White House. I went around the White House ample times. Then, I was hovering over the large roof of the White house. All of a sudden, I fell with a plopp on the roof. Oh, no the carpet collasped on top of me. Wrestling with the cumbersome carpet I found something you put gas in. I geuss it ran off gas. Standing up from wrestling with the carpet I felt as stiff as a statue. Then I seen gas in the corner. I ran as fast as lightning to the gas and put in the run I pushed the button and said I would like to to home. In the twinkle of and eye I was back in my rose pink and lime room. I will never forget this astounding morning.

Score Point: 5

This response reflects an outstanding degree of proficiency in narrative writing skills. The writer's story about traveling to Washington, D.C. on a flying carpet is generally well organized. Key ideas are explained and syntactic variety is demonstrated. Facility in the use of language is evident (normally the sun illuminated my room, wrestling with the cumbersome carpet, and I felt as stiff as a statue). Further, more even development would be required for a higher score.
